CANAL+ Numérique via DSL and CANALSATDSL available on Freebox for Free ADSL customers

The CANAL+ group, France's leading pay TV operator, and Free (Iliad Group), the largest French alternative ADSL provider, signed an agreement to include the CANAL+ premium channels, its digital versions and the full range of CANALSATDSL channels in Free's television offering.

CANAL+ Numérique via DSL and CANALSATDSL will be available on Freebox beginning November 24. Prospective customers may subscribe to the full CANAL+ Numérique via DSL and CANALSATDSL services on www.free.fr beginning November 4.

Any Free ADSL subscriber¹ in an unbundled area who has a Freebox (any version) and subscribes to the CANAL+ Numérique via DSL and CANALSATDSL services on www.free.fr will receive the full range of premium content CANAL+ Group's television channels on any TV set connected to a Freebox.

This partnership is part of the CANAL+ Group's strategy to expand to all distribution media. Free, the leading multiservice ADSL provider with its broad subscriber base is a particularly strong partner for the CANAL+ Group.

Free, the only company currently offering ADSL 2+ service is pursuing a strategy based on technological innovation and the strength of its telecommunications network to expand the services offered to its subscribers. Free is proud to distribute the channels and programming offered by the CANAL+ Group, the leader in premium-content pay TV.

CANAL+ Numérique includes the premium CANAL+ channel and also CANAL+ Cinéma, CANAL+ Sport, CANAL+ Confort and CANAL+ 16:9 (the CANAL+ Digital subscription price is €15 per month for 1 year until December 31, 2004.)
