Free announces the roll-out of FTTH service to Valenciennes

In cooperation with the city of Valenciennes, Free will roll out an optical fiber network to subscribers (FTTH) in the town.

With this development, Free will be able to bring a dedicated optical fiber line to households for their multimedia activities and meet consumers' High-speed Broadband needs.

This network will offer consumers improved service quality (higher bandwidth at identical speeds regardless of proximity...), as well as a wide range of multimedia applications: Multi-station HD TV, self-produced video content, etc.

The €29.99 package (the same price as the ADSL package), which will come on stream during the 2nd quarter of 2008, will provide residents of Valenciennes with:

- Optical fiber Internet access with speeds of 100 Mbit/s download, and 50 Mbit/s upload;
- Unlimited calls to fixed lines in 70 destinations including mainland France (excluding special numbers), without having to maintain a telephone subscription;
- A range of audiovisual services including access to over 100 channels on two televisions as well as access to High Definition (HD) channels;
- Provision of 2 Freebox units, both of which allow access to TV services:
 - o the High Definition-compatible Optical Freebox equipped with 4 Ethernet ports and integrated router and WiFi functions,
 - o the HD-compatible High Definition Freebox, including a digital recorder which can be linked to the Optical Freebox via Ethernet or WiFi.

This package will be available to ADSL subscribers as well as to all households wishing to subscribe to Free in areas covered by the service.
