Scaleway acquires Saagie
to accelerate the development of a fully sovereign data and AI platform

Scaleway is announcing today that it has acquired Saagie, a French DataOps platform that provides key technologies to accelerate data & AI projects. This strategic move supports Scaleway's vision to build a fully sovereign European platform that brings together cloud infrastructure, data, and AI under one roof.

Recognised by Gartner as one of the most advanced DataOps platforms, Saagie enables companies to design and deploy data workflows more efficiently. Its technology provides a robust orchestration layer that connects key components across the data lifecycle, including data ingestion, storage, processing, machine learning, and visualisation. Already trusted by public institutions and large enterprises, Saagie simplifies the complexity of running data and AI projects at scale.

"Everyone says there's no AI without data, but what's often overlooked is that there's no reliable AI without trusted and governed data. To fast-track AI adoption, Scaleway must provide a state-of-the-art data PaaS ecosystem. Saagie helps us build this unique expertise," says Damien Lucas, CEO of Scaleway.

The integration of Saagie into Scaleway's ecosystem will give customers access to a more complete and streamlined solution to support their data strategy. From real-time analytics to smart industry applications and generative AI, organisations will be able to manage the full lifecycle of their data projects with greater speed and control.

As part of this acquisition, Scaleway is stepping into Normandy with the opening of a new office in Rouen, home to Saagie's headquarters and core team. This move ensures continuity for local talent and anchors Scaleway in the region. It also complements the company's broader regional expansion in France, following the offices it has recently opened in Lyon, Rennes, Toulouse and Bordeaux, in addition to its historical locations in Paris and Lille.

Damien Lucas went on to say: "With Saagie we'll be able to deliver fully sovereign data and AI pipelines. Saagie products will soon be available in all our European locations: Paris, Amsterdam, Warsaw and our recently announced new sites of Milan and Stockholm".
